Hermitage museum guide

The Hermitage Museum in St. Petersburg is one of the best museums I have ever visited. Located in a beautiful winter palace and home to one of the largest art collections in the world, it is definitely a treat for any art enthusiast. Being the second largest museum in the world, it can certainly feel a little overwhelming planning a visit to it. That's why I created this blog with some information and tips on how to best visit the Hermitage Museum in St. Petersburg. First of all, let's start with the history of this beautiful place. The Great Catherine's Russian Empress was a true art patron who began to acquire an art collection for her winter palace in St. Petersburg. He bought a large art collection from Berlin businessman Johann Arnst Gotzowsky. He originally created it for Perus King Frederick II. But, after he refused, he sold it to Empress, Russia. Catherine devoted part of the palace to her new art collection. During his time, it was not yet available to the public, but only a few could see it. Not only was the collection impressive to me, but the building where the museum is located is itself a piece of art. It is composed of six buildings, but the central part of it is the winter palace with its recognizable green facade. Ironically enough, I read how they re-painted it a few times throughout history, with different colors. So, sometimes it was red, yellow, etc. Until after World War II, it was painted again in its original bright green. It was used as a palace and a home for the Romanov family. The great Catherine organized numerous events there, from masquerades for formalities, to large receptions and various ceremonies. Its main purpose can still be felt in its interiors with large halls and historic furniture. Some rooms really stand out with its wall decorations and furniture. The gallery known as 'Raphael Loggias' is particularly remarkable. It was created in the 1780s as a replica of the room where Raphael was painted at the Apostoli Palace in Rome. With more than 3 million objects, hermitage is the world's second largest museum. It is said that if you spend only one minute observing each exhibition, you will have to spend 11 years in a museum. Eleven years! The best part of the series is the choice of Western European art. Works by Italian Renaissance painters such as Leonardo da Vinci and Raphael or by Dutch masters such as Rembrandt are among the most famous. Besides these are collections of ancient Egypt, antique art, baroque painting and classical sculpture. My visit to my Hermitage Museum visited the Hermitage Museum during my recent visit to St. Petersburg. My friend Lilia, who lives there, was too sweet to offer car to care. so Marijan and I can enjoy visiting us without children while the two of them were having fun on their own, we've joined one of the small group tours organized at the Hermitage Museum. Only four of us are in one. So we really had a chance to learn about the fascinating history of this place. From the moment we entered the museum and seen some of its decorations and graffiti. As long as the collection of Dutch masters I particularly liked, I have enjoyed every second of my visit to the Hermitage Museum and I really hope to visit it again.
