Okay... I had this app years ago and I loved it, but when it says that I need a microphone to hear I saw pictures or books in Angela's eyes and I saw a look that is a hacker inside the game or eye and apparently, if you go to the game they take pictures of you and know who you are and I think most ppl know that the guy went missing bc that game and PPL say that there is a guy in his eyes and I think it has nothing to do with the missing guy but I can not see the boy in his eye and I'm 9 a year old and when I went out of the game I tried to delete it while facing my iPod wall so that the hacker could not take pictures of me and some ppl do not believe the rumors and not then when it says: you have to access the mic, that I hear you look at his eyes and tell me what's out there and I looked at the other comments and said if you slap him you see a man but I don't understand how to slap him so when I pushed him out of the chair I did a screenshot and when I looked in his eyes I was terrified and worried about CUZ I saw a thing that looked like a white dress and black hair so I deleted that game and IM never again There are many scary stories about this app that wasn't true. I've had this app since I was about 3. People say are the trackers behind this application. That's not true. Sometimes there's something in his eyes, but I think it's more an Easter egg than something terrible. It's what looks like a room, but all the pictures of the men in his eyes have been edited. Now the old conversation will feature half of things. No one responds immediately in real life. Anyway I used to play it on my old iPad that was not logged on to the Apple ID and did not have a SIM card and I used to chat with him. Messages are automatic replies. The chat feature wasn't built for kids anyway so all the scary things she said were very likely to be fun for adults. The real reason it wasn't available to the child probably wasn't that it was real people, but that they were jokes that kids would take seriously. I have no reason to believe this game is dangerous. Many reviews are probably from people who know nothing about the game and have only seen what is online. I hope you find it helpful.1 n0t 4 b0t. So, I've always used this game when I was younger a few years ago, but then today I downloaded it again and I only did it to see if people are right about the game being horrible. I went to the bathroom and closed the door and there was black... I put my phone up to my ear and waited just to hear the white noise plus the white noise is not even scary because every game has a white noise when you put it in your ear. Anyway, I heard a little white noise, and then I heard a loud slap, and I didn't. I started panicking and I still didn't know if it was actually a game making that noise so I went to my father's room bc felt more safe and not so scared there so I put it in my ear again and I didn't hear anything... So, I discovered that my volume button controls how loud the white noise is so I turned it way up waiting for something, but then I hear a slam again that I start panicking again and I threw my phone almost out of bed as I was that scared and I decided to make out as I love doing comments.... download this game to see for yourself if you click here but make sure you delete it immediately after... @. I'm never going to download it again. Developer Outfit7 Limited has not provided Apple with details about its privacy practices and handling of the data. I think it's a good reason for young children not to play it. For example, if they are in the game, and enjoy it, they can go online to see what other people think about it, leading them to hear horrible people watching them through their phone. Even if it doesn't happen on this app, it can scare kids, can anyone really find me through the app?. Also, taking this app out mode, makes me feel like the age rating should be higher. Seriously, it just seems to make an app that targets young children, but then put the adult mode into it that can be easily turned on. In general, it's a no to me. Sexy stuffPrivacy & Safety Report in this review of Talking Angela is an app where kids play an animated virtual cat. adjusting their appearance, getting her to repeat her words, and text-chatting with the kind of artificial intelligence bot that has been around since the early days of the home computer. It shouldn't be controversial, but it is. Massively. This is mainly because of a year-old Facebook hoax claiming that the talking cat had a cuddly face (and a squeaky voice) in a paedophile ring that appeared on the social network this month, and went viral. Don't download Talking Angela. It's a hacker sitting behind a webcam that can see you, but you can't see him. Angela asks very personal and perverse questions, argued one widely circulated warning. Check your child's tablet or phones to see if they have this app in your pedo ring, yelled another. They see their child and hack their pictures and their friends list... No, it's not a hacker sitting in the back of a webcam. No, the questions aren't perverse. No, there is no paedo ring that can access children's friend lists. And yet judging by the more than 700,000 page views so far in my article this week exploring what Talking Angela has really said to children - parents around the world have been intimidated by warnings. The app is working on Outfit7, part of its Talking Tom and Friends series, which currently has more than 230 million monthly active users, after 1.5bn app downloads since the first app was released in June 2010. Chief executive Samo Login and senior brand director Randeep Sidhu spoke to the Guardian to give his opinion on the hoax, as well as other criticisms of Talking Angela's suitability for children. Starting with some of these requirements on Facebook. We need an army of paedophiles. I don't know how it started or how it gained traction. These things just happen, said Log in, pointing out that hacker/webcam claims get into trouble when you consider that Talking Angela has been downloaded 57m times so far. We have millions of users every day using this app. Can you imagine we need an army of paedophiles? It's ridiculous, he said, before suggesting that if parents use the app themselves even in a short period of time, they'll be sure that Angela is really a virtual cat chat-bot handling conversational tasks. While it might easily be thought that you are talking to a person when you pay attention, everyone can easily know that it's not a person on the other side: it's only a semi-intelligent conversation that you have, he said. We do not have a connection to the servers: the brain engine is a mobile app, and all that the engine meets is Sidhu created: We have incredibly complex technology based on a lot of work, but it's actually just programmed intelligence. Some of the worries Talking Angela has about the questions she asks: user name, age, what they want to do at school, and so on. This information may not be conveyed in the paedo ring, but it is a fair question to ask what is going on. The company has already launched a FAQ on its website arguing that issues are used to optimize app content, such as using the age of users to dictate the appropriate topics in the conversation. Outfit7 says it sees aggregated data - we are able to see how many users of all ages we have, but can't determine the name and age of a specific user - and also catch anonymous and obfuscated data log files to see which topics have proved popular in the app's text-chat mode, so it can program Angela with more and better responses. Yes, we collect conversations, but we are only interested in how certain topics are accessed and which are most popular. We remove all personal information from the device before the information is transmitted - names, addresses and so on, said Sign In. It's purely to get information about what's interesting and engaging for users, added Sidhu. We're taking out anything that might be identifiable. We're too careful to filter the information to make sure that nothing identifiable can leave the app. Angela's chatty is a chatbot. Photo: PRWith kids, you can never be too careful!If I used Talking Angela this week in an article she actually says I had some worries as a parent. First, although there is a child mode that turned off the text-chat feature, it was too easy for children to turn the child's mode off and bring it back. Second, that features like YouTube weren't behind the parental gate at all, potentially sending kids out of unregulated online video waters. In iOS, talking Angela is not classified as apple's children's app, where it would face stricter rules on making it harder to leave the app. The lack of these restrictions seems like a problem. We apply the parental gate, said Sign in, although he suggested that children old enough to use the app's text chat feature are probably old enough to understand the parent's gate instructions - for example, you're asked to wipe two fingers down the screen or convert a written number to numbers. Even after adding a parental gate, if someone can use a chat-bot, they can probably break the lock, said Sidhu. But kids, you can never be too careful, and in some cases it can be useful, so that's why we're applying it, added Sign Up. But the only purpose of the chat-bot is entertainment. Outfit7 faces the delicate task of explaining its policy as a developer who claims its apps appeal to children and adults alike. Some of these flirtatious chat-bot banter sounds innocent to adults, but unsuitable for children, for example. Some people have also picked up the inclusion of a giggle juice item that seemingly simulates alcohol. Again, fine adults, are not so good for children. Would it be more responsible to run separate applications for children and adults? The login claimed it would be a commercial mistake. We have a really wide audience: that's why we always have to consider that apps need to be safe for children, and also interesting for adults, he said. In my opinion, focusing on a very narrow user base in our sector would make our lives much more difficult. It's much harder to stay at the top of the chart when your target demographic situation is very narrow. That's why we create apps that can satisfy children and adults. The best thing is to tell the truth!It's a risky line of defense that can open up Outfit7's accusations that it is putting its commercial growth ahead of parents' concerns about their children. Also, his suggestion that if parents install the app, they should also be responsible for activating the child's mode - true enough, though as he concedes, it should sit next to the commitments of app developers, rather than replacing them. Currently Outfit7 is trying to combat hoaxes by speaking publicly, launching its own KKK and relying on that 230m strong community to put the word out. You can't have a real answer to this kind of virality when it happens. We cannot take measures that stop it. So the best thing is to tell the truth. What else can we do?, logged in. It's been a terrible thing that's happening, and very disturbing. The people who make these apps are people who care. Some of the comments online are incredibly painful: they have never set out to do something like this, added Sidhu. What's uplifting is that so many new fans and existing fans are debunking a lot of this stuff online and supporting us. Currently, Outfit7 is pressing for new apps and Talking Tom and Friends tv show, based on its previous web series disney, which was a YouTube hit. Talking Angela, meanwhile, has rocketed to back up the app store charts last week, even against this backdrop of fake warnings. Sometimes when you have a crisis, the people who rally around you are the ones who care. We feel supported by people who actually use our apps, Sidhu said. I think we've developed confidence in the user base, and it's growing, added Sign In. What the Talking Angela app is really telling your kids With 230m users, Talking Tom Cat apps are bigger than Twitter
